

hear yourself smile

Whimsy, listening to no other Caught up in your own words

So eager clambering we go jump in at first semi-pause of another's need scared to find the feeble shadow of our dreams at dawn

You've been so long away why come just yet.

we've only just begun

bright lace and promises

A kiss for luck and we're on our way

before the rising sun

we fly —

So many roads to choose

we start out walking and learn to run

sharing horizons that are new to us

talking it over just the two of us and when the evenin' comes we smile

Yes,

We've Just

Begun

We don't think it's worth it

...... As soon as the rush is over, I'm going to have a nervous breakdown. I worked for it, I owe it to myself, and nobody is going to deprive me of it.

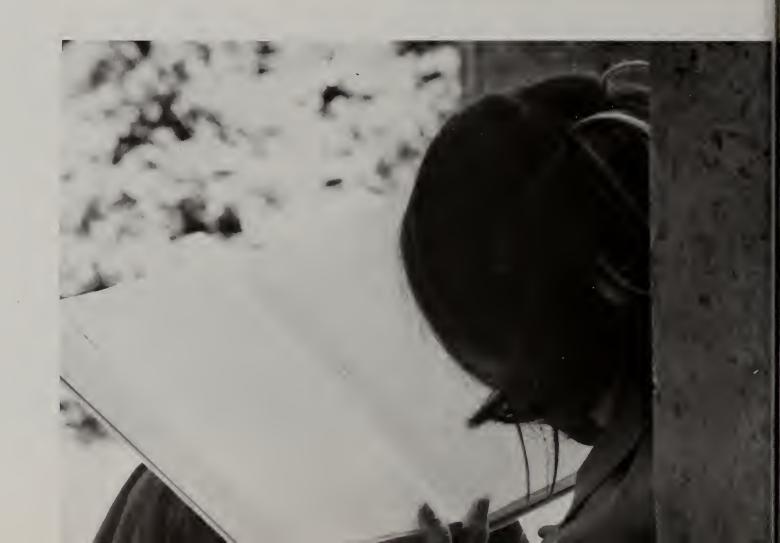

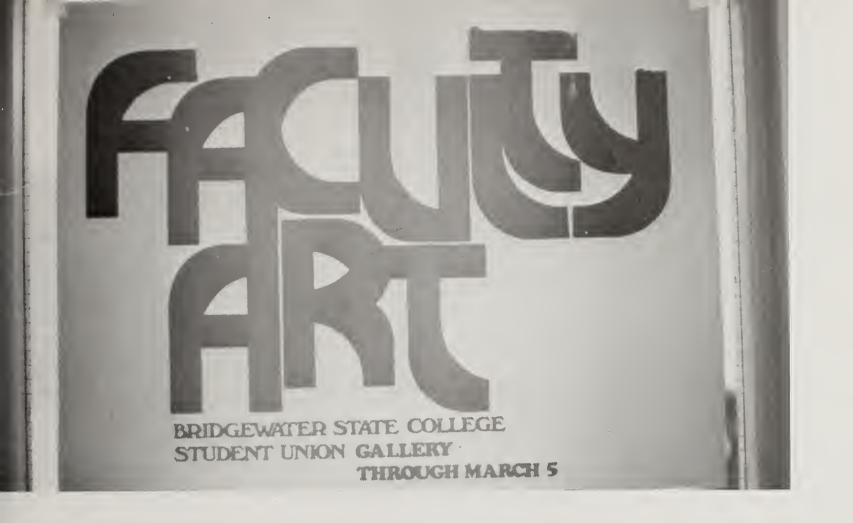

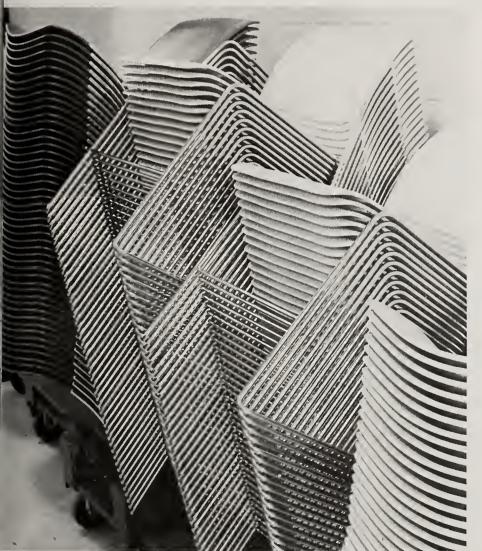

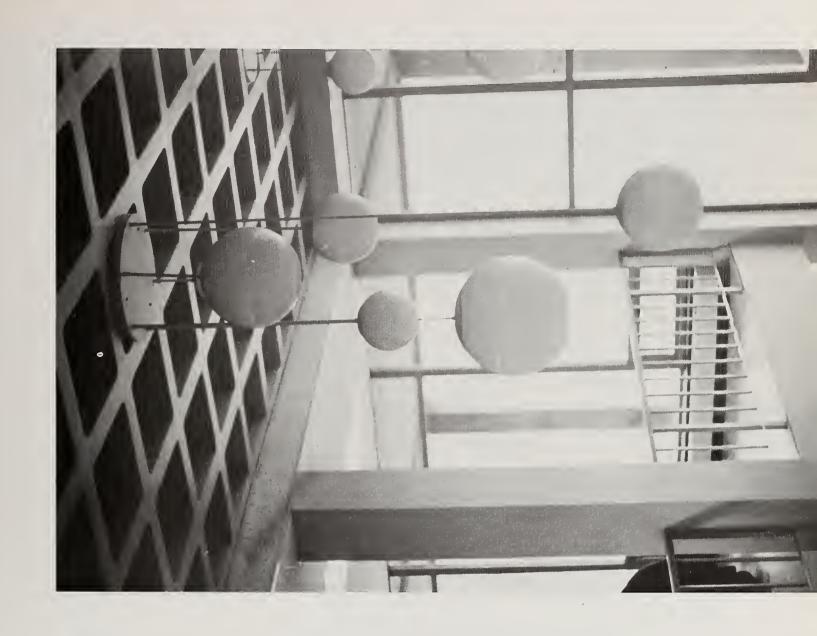

he Dream When the white eagle of the North is flying overhead The browns, reds and golds of autumn lie in gutter, dead. Remember then, that summer birds with wings of fire flaying Came to witness springs new hope, born of leaves decaying. Just as new life will come from death, love will come at leisure.

Love of love, love of life and giving without measure Gives in return a wondrous yearn of a promise almost seen.

Live hand-in-hand and together will stand on the threshold of a dream.

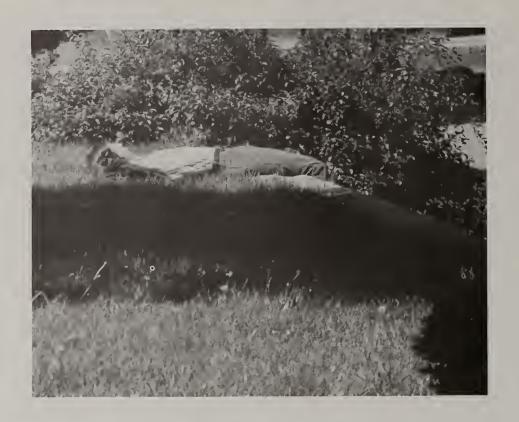

"Go placidly amid the noise and haste and remember what peace there may be in silence. As far as possible without surrender be on good terms with all persons . . ."

TRATION

To the Class of 1971 — A Valediction

Like aging Arthur at Camelot we dub you worthy Knights and Dames and send you forth to cleanse some spot from the world's soiled linen, urging you not to use detergents that pollute your names.

The road you go you'd never take if you had any say in the matter, out to a world you didn't make, part of it ruled by a rattlesnake, part by a Mad Hatter.

We've tried to arm you cap-a-pie with weapons smithies never made — the sharp mind and the piercing eye to penetrate the sorcerer's lie and honor's shield to turn the infidel's blade.

But alas, like Arthur, we've grown too fusty for lads and lasses so precocious; the arms we gave you are somewhat rusty, our battle-wisdom a trifle musty and the dragons more ferocious.

And if we're honest, we must confess that though we once fought battles too we've left the world a ghastly mess, worse than we found it, a veritable cesspool of corruption, a witches' brew.

Perhaps it's time we abdicated and yielded Camelot's throne to you. After all, the succession's fated when kings and sages have grown out-dated and the rheum of age bedims their view.

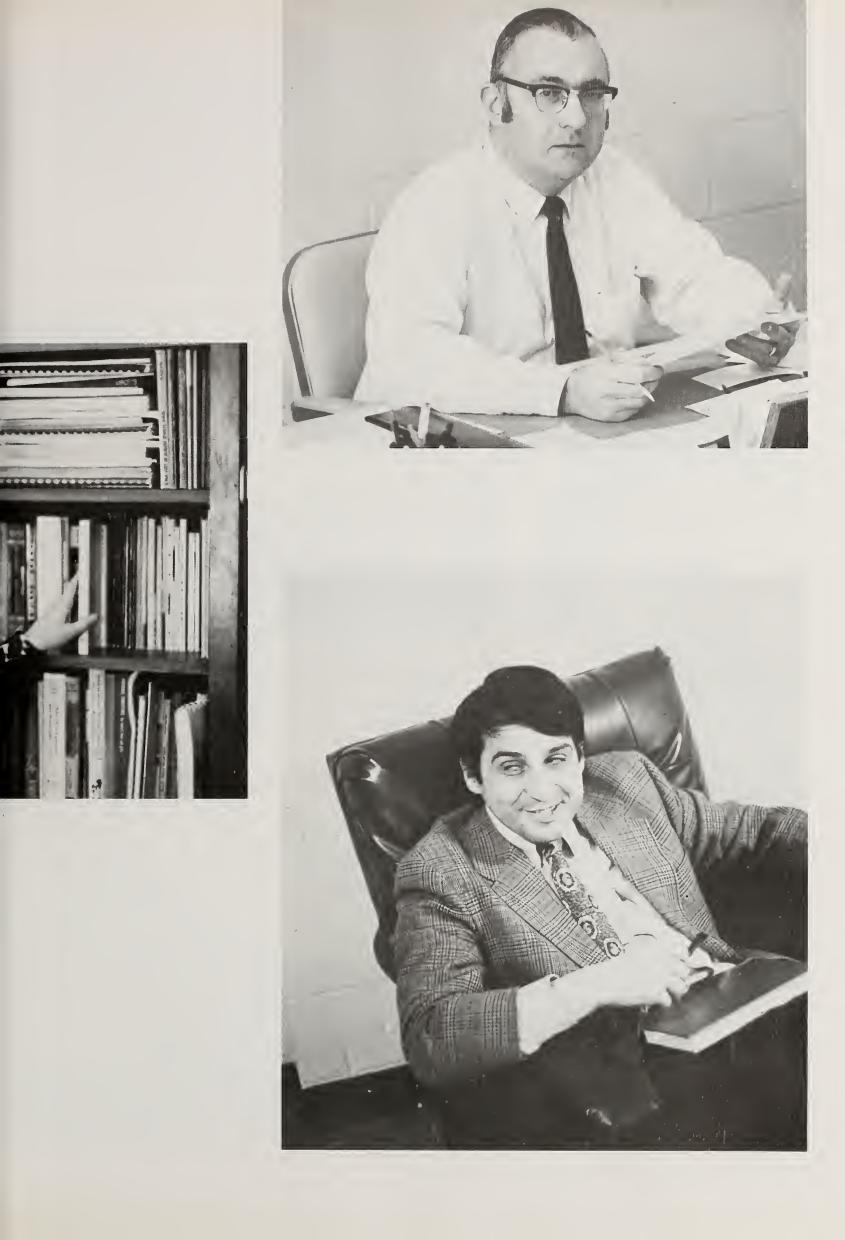

So take the sceptre, take the throne, wearily to you conceded, and now that you are on your own ready to face the world alone, please, please — try to do a better job than we did.

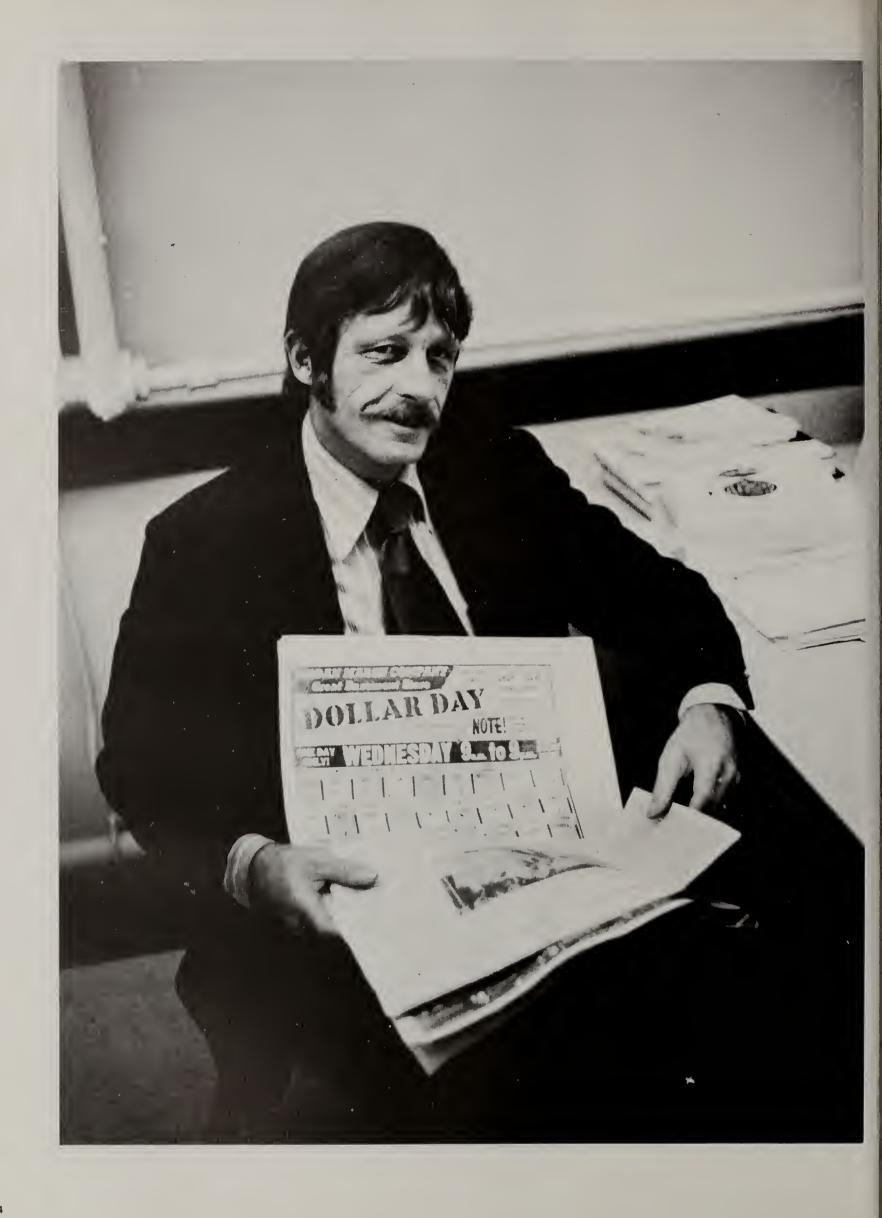

Joseph DeRocco

I WONDER

I wonder a lot about things. I wonder how people remember things and why we forget. I wonder what it is like inside your head. I wonder why my car goes thump thump when I start it on a cold morning. Questions, questions always flooding in on me. But I wouldn't have it any other way. What a bore life would be if no questions occurred or if no problems presented themselves. That wouldn't even be living. Living is searching, I think. It's not even in finding answers so much as it is in the searching that you grab the gusto.

What a cruel irony then that in our schools we squelch the searching instinct — or at best fail to nurture it. Perhaps it's not the fault of the schools. I don't know. But I do know that by the time they get to college, students have lost almost all of their intellectual curiosity. (I say lost because I think it is something innate, something children are born with.) It is the rare Bridgewater student who has a head full of questions driving him and guiding him in his pursuit of knowledge. If I assign a term paper on a topic of the students' own choosing, with the intention of giving them an opportunity to dig into some problem that really grabs them, many have a hard time finding anything at all that looks interesting. I wonder how people can go through life without wondering.

But I don't mean to put down the students at Bridgewater. I'm just pointing out that we've got to do everything we can to cultivate and enrich that sense of wonder and curiosity, especially in children. And if it is not entirely innate, then perhaps we have to start thinking about how to create or instigate it.

When I was a kid I was always trying to figure out how things worked. I'd always be taking something apart — a clock, a motor, whatever I could get my hands on. That kind of thing can be nurtured by discovery-type approaches to teaching. I guess the point is that we've got to think more in terms of nurturing and less in terms of teaching. And our nurturing has got to be supportive, in the sense of assuring the child that he has the capacity to discover things for himself. To do this the teacher must have faith in the child's capacity to discover things for himself. And this means that we must be willing to accept greater risks. There is the risk, for example, that a kid messing around with electricity may give himself a bad shock or that someone experimenting with human relations may get his head messed up. And there is always the risk that some may fail who might have made it under some more spoon-fed type of regimen. Yet neither of these risks seems anywhere near as great to me as the risk of generalized atrophying of the sense of wonder which we run by continuing our educational policies of scheduled forced feedings. I wonder why it is so hard for us to change our accustomed ways of doing things.

James R. Scroggs

A THEORY OF EDUCATION

Man as a creature of the whole of the universe found survival methods basic to education. As millions of years passed, he progressed very slowly. Inspired by the life within him, he forced his way to complete dominance, often at the expense of other parts of creation.

Forests, birds, and animals fell under his mighty hand. But he did not rest there. Men in his path were obliterated. Dominant men were the masters of all.

Notwithstanding this, there was no real satisfaction. He was restless and ill at ease. The truth was that a basic part of survival was selfhood, man's ability to look in on himself. Food alone could not satisfy the immaterial self we call spirit.

Learning how to survive is rooted in food, shelter, language, and sex. At the base of it all, however, is the key to the spirit — how to respect all men, all creatures, all life on earth of which we are only a part.

We are masters, masters of destruction, at least. We will suffer destruction unless at long last our education can be a thing of the spirit as well as the flesh. That education must lead to the selfhood of all men and the realization of their place in nature. This is man's potentiality.

Technological man knows his earth and its place in the universe better than earlier cultures. Unfortunately, he has supplanted the motive for survival with the drive for mastery of the yet unknown.

The survival of mankind must be fundamental to a theory of education. Survival as a concept can only be found when its nourishment is respect for all of creation. Selfhood, surivial, the world, depend upon an education built on this base.

Dr. Joseph Moore

BRIDGEWATER: A PERSONAL VIEW

Recently on a Tuesday evening at the "Club" a friend startled me by asking, "why are you here?" At first I misunderstood his question and was momentarily overwhelmed by a sense of defensiveness. I stuttered, "I like it here." Fortunately I was saved further embarrassment by my friend who realized I was in difficulty. "No," he said, "I mean why do you stay at the college?" The "C.C." being the place that it is on Tuesday evenings we were prevented from becoming too deeply engaged in the philosophical implications of the question. Yet, my friend planted a seed that evening which since then has been slowly germinating.

Certainly our college has its weaknesses. One can find them in all three segments of the community — student body, faculty, administration. One defect which flaws the local scene is parochialism which runs counter to Cardinal Newman's humane and liberalizing conception of the university as a place where young people are rendered capable of relating and integrating all the various fields of human knowledge. Our student body, for instance, is drawn from a too-narrow geographical area and probably from a too-limited socioeconomic base as well. I think it would benefit from an infusion of greater cultural diversity.

The Bridgewater faculty reflects to some extent an earlier institutional purpose when we were limited to teacher training. More serious in its effects upon the faculty has been a kind of institutional incest that has brought many Bridgewater graduates back to become teachers here. In fairness, however, one must recognize that during the past decade the college has added many faculty members from all over the country and with degrees representing a great variety of universities.

Administratively there was a vast improvement during the sixties. It was not so long ago that the administrative structure and policy at Bridgewater was completely authoritarian. This is no longer the case. Today the faculty may play a role in determining academic policy which is limited chiefly by the amount of responsibility it is willing to accept. We also seem to be moving, though slowly, in the direction of student participation in academic policy making.

No doubt a serious handicap is to be found in the dependence of the college for financial support upon the state legislature, the members of which are not always imbued with either Newman's vision of the university nor with any other vision which we would find acceptable. On the other hand, some of the nation's greatest universities are state supported, so not even this drawback should be considered fatally limiting.

I am saddened when I hear some of my faculty colleagues deriding students. On the whole I feel that Bridgewater students need not take a back seat to any other body of undergraduates. Certainly we have our share of students who are going along for the ride. What college doesn't? A large percentage of our students are perhaps overly concerned with up-grading their socio-economic status. Surely this emphasis tends to interfere with more liberal educational objectives and yet, who can criticize them? In spite of this I have had the privilege of knowing and teaching some first-rate young minds at Bridgewater. More important, I have been fortunate to know a great many fine people among the students, and when they offer their friendship I count it one of the great rewards of teaching.

Thus, not surprisingly, we find that the college has its pluses and minuses. There are serious defects, many of them left over from the past, yet an important characteristic is dynamic change. When I face the personal question — why do I stay — I am led to ask a number of other questions and implicit in the answer to these is the answer to the original question. Would I be more satisfied "doing my thing" in more hallowed and ivy-covered walls? Would it make any difference if my student friends wore only the best school ties? Would they be more human, more worthy, more virtuous? Would I, by transferring the seat of my professional activities, by virtue of that movement, become suddenly often-published and famous. Would the beers taste better at Morey's in New Haven or Cronin's in Harvard Square? The answer to all of these has to be emphatically . . . no! And so I find I stay because, "I like it here."

William R. Cole

Life is made of the ebb and flow of others; some to know some to love some only to pass by and perhaps some to hate.

How we are molded by the touch of others; tender and loving cruel and punishing or only indifferent.

In being cared for we learn to care; in being scorned we come to hate; in finding openness we come to trust; in being loved we learn to love.

How transitory is our knowing of another for in saying hello we are already saying goodbye. Like Windblown leaves the touching of our lives is ever changing, ever coming into being and ever being swept away.

From time to time we are fortunate in knowing another at levels which are more than mere passing. From such depths we draw strength and build more solidly the bridge between us.

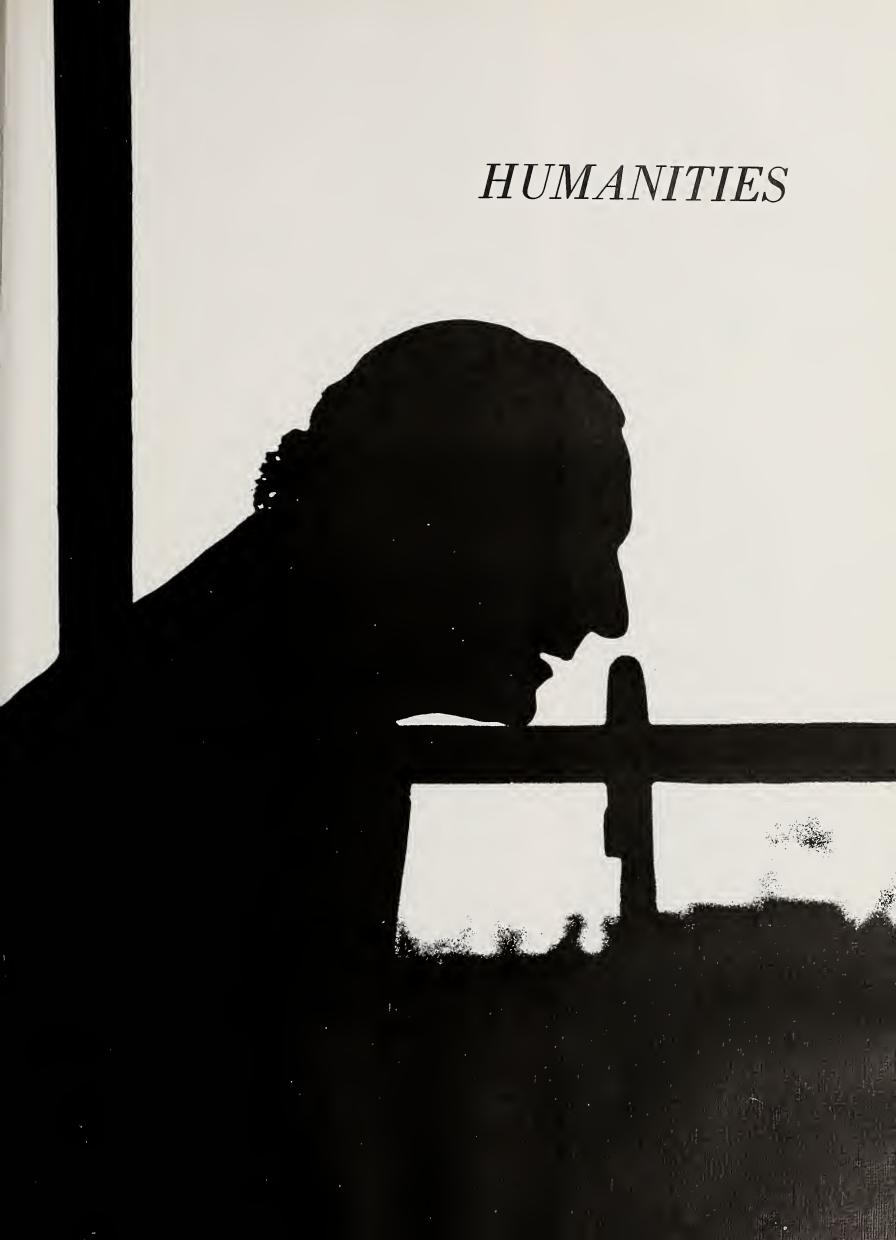

Such discovery fills our loneliness and makes us complete.

There is healing in our encounters;
growth in caring for another;
joy in openness and sharing though the risk often seems perilous and the pain is greater at our parting.

The road of our lives winds on to where who knows when.

We are left with the knowledge that we must celebrate the temporary for that is all we have —
and all we are.
